TUESDAY MEETING
Is Diversifying the Only Way of Decoupling?
 PRESENTED BY:
Dr. Juergen Meyer
*Interim Manager
 Managing Partner, Yanjie - Horizon*

Politicians - especially German ones - use the keyword "diversifying", when they talk about a solution to reduce dependency on one country like China. That's what they have copied from economists' concept of risk management. But the details count.

- What is the economic change needed to be prepared for the future?
- What is the purpose of the proposed change in economic relations?
- How can a change in economic relations be designed? Which alternatives exist?
- Description of alternative solutions to diversification

In Love With Rotary Club Shanghai

February 14. Lovers Day, Valentine's Day. For more than 20 Rotarians and Friends, this special day meant meeting each other, laughing together, and listening to the inspiring stories of guest speaker Gary Wang, CEO of MindSpan.

Besides this, the meeting, led by Tilman Rieger in absence of President David, offered some very special moments: Due to the visit of Randal Eastman, now a member of the RC St. Petersburg (Russia), there were not only two founding members of RCS present, Randal and Frank, but also three current or past Special Representatives for China: Andrew, Frank, and Randal. Caused by a broken car, Andrew even undertook a 45-minute walk to meet Randal.

After dinner, Gary shared his passion for running and coaching with us. He spoke of an "enormous potential" and big opportunities for the coaching industry in China, as only 1 percent of companies in China purchased coaching services yet.

Thanks to matching by Frank, we ended up with a Happy Money amount of CNY 7.500.

Is diversifying the only way of decoupling?

Politicians - especially German ones - use the keyword “diversifying”, when they talk about a solution to reduce dependency on one country like China. That’s what they have copied from economists’ concept of risk management. But there are other paths out of dependency, which could be even more suitable for German companies.
