Highlights from the last meeting

Even though small, the breakfast fellowship was a lovely event. A number of intrepid Rotarians joined and the small group allowed for lively discussions, ranging from the new data protection law to 996 regulations to recent personal travel challenges. Thus such meetings lend themselves to discussions for which regular dinner meetings are too formal and less intimate, while fellowship dinners are often more about the food and pure social interaction. Also that most staid even after 10:00 underlines the appreciation.

Speaker Program: Managing China's Generation Gap
Advice from China CEOs

One of the most challenging aspects of leading large teams in today's China is the widening and deepening generation gap in the workforce. China's Post 2000s, Post 90s, and earlier generations differ greatly in key aspects, including career goals, preferred companies, advancement expectations, incentives, professional strengths, working style and lifestyle. Consider that some China-based consumer products companies identify such large differences among China's younger generations that they track consumer groups not by decades but in five-year increments. How can managers of large teams create a cohesive corporate culture, and shared goals among such diverse employees?
